Its about those collaborations with unknown artists that get released on the B side of a hot single, said B-Cide. Since 1998 B-Cide has dedicated his life to his passion for making music. Born and raised in Utica, New York, B-Cide lives and breathes for the art. What started as just him and his friends messing around for fun evolved into his life passion. I really cant think of anything else most of the time, said B-Cide. Music is my life. Pop in his new CD, The Self-Proclaimed King, and his distinct, raspy voice grabs the listeners attention from the intro. I guess it is kind of like if Lil Jon had a white kid from Utica, B-Cide joked. I dont know how to describe my sound its just me Master P, C-Murder, Ludacris and David Banner are inspirations of B-Cide and their influence comes across in his rhymes. I dont try to be like anyone. Most of my inspiration comes from life in general but I do listen to a lot of Southern music, said B-Cide. B-Cides new album features 20 tracks and three bonus cuts. It is a mix of horror-core rap, club beats, and sentimental rhymes about life lessons and growing up in a broken home. I will write about my mom having a bad day at work and then some shit about shooting a cop, said B-Cide. I dont stick to one particular style. If Im feeling a certain vibe from a beat I just get something in my head. Ill lay down a track that is all fact and then one like I didnt kill this bitch, which just tells some crazy story that is a 100 percent escape from reality. The Self-Proclaimed King is B-Cides second solo album. I am continuously evolving and I think my first album, Upstate Madness: Welcome to Utica (2003) was a little more angry, said B-Cide. The new one is more in-your-face. Yall are gonna know I am the king and Im dropping my mic in the middle of the city. B-Cide has dropped numerous mix-tapes including 2006s Fuck The Haters The Mix Tape, and 2003s compilation with other local artists, The Big East. The mix tapes are getting plenty of street credibility and B-Cide even got personal props from C-Murder's record label, TRU Records for a remix he did on the rappers latest video. B-Cide has performed in New York City, Ohio, New Orleans and Michigan. Performing is where it is at, said B-Cide. I will perform for one or 100,000 people, it is what I do. If I get that chance I am gonna rule the world. B-CIDE features long time partner, SHYSTY on this album, not only rapping but producing beats for the album. Not only will label mate SHYSTY be on the album, but X-KAL will be featured as well, not only rapping, but producing a majority of beats for the album. B-CIDE will be featuring hometown rappers from BRICK MONEY ENT. - G.A. R. DOLLAZ for a little more of that East Coast flavor. B-CIDE also has a feature with the infamous and controversial West Coast Bay Area Horrorcore rapper MARS which is sure to leave an impact a listener will not soon forget. Adding a little R&B flavor to the album is EastSide Productions own JAMES MEENAN who really brings an amazing hook to the track I DON'T KNOW which is about a lost love of B-CIDE's.
