During this time, Manu played gigs in local pubs and clubs in London and back home in Wiltshire. A quick change of tack saw Manu go back to college to study more. Which paid off with a place at Sheffield Hallam University to Study Business. It was here that Manu formed the rock band 'Silverside' and went on to gig in and around the City, including a stint in the studio. Manu has continued to play regularly at open mic nights, bars and clubs on the South Coast. Manu's live sets usually feature original songs, with a plethora of covers, usually adapted from dance and soul-oriented material, breaking away from the run of the mill. The name Manu is maori for 'Bird of Freedom'. It is the national symbol of the maori people of New Zealand. "The name was used because a Kiwi friend always called me Manu, after a friend of hers back home."
