From coastal cafes to outback pubs, rural townships to urban metropolises, Jack Mancor will be playing a mammoth 30+ dates through October to December, traversing his way right up the eastern seaboard and back down again. From Bourke to Nimbin, Brisbane to Melbourne and every hotel and watering hole along the way, Jack Mancor is bringing his dust strewn, hand-crafted, raw as life folk tunes to the nation. The colossal tour is in support of Jack Mancor's second album Black Top Blues, which will be released independently on October 13. The follow-up to his 2004 release Looking For Something, half of Black Top Blues was recorded on Windy Hill in Whinchelsea, Vic - in the solar powered wind generated country home and studio of Dave Steel and Tiffany Eckhardt. Dave Steel produced the album, whilst also adding several of the instruments as well as backing vocals. With the other half of the album recorded in a studio in Melbourne's inner-north, Black Top Blues also features The Devilish Marys and Matiss Schubert. It's an album that brings together some of the finest roots and folk performers the Australian music industry has to offer. A self-taught singer, songwriter, storyteller and contemporary folk musician, Jack Mancor's characteristic style is one based on the traditional but set in the contemporary. Born in Melbourne, but growing up all across Australia, he has developed a sense of the past, a love of his country and the ability to acknowledge and document the struggles and laughter of its people. With a natural ability to interpret life's experiences through the eyes of the everyday, Jack's songs strike a chord in those aware of the problems of the world, but still holding a hope for a brighter future. Drawing on established folk, roots, country and blues styles, Jack carries on the oral storytelling tradition. Taking inspiration from a variety of traditional and contemporary musicians, from Townes Van Zandt, Bruce Springsteen, and Steve Earle to Muddy Waters, Paul Kelly and Woody Guthrie, Jack takes pride in singing about life from the coal face. Joining Jack Mancor on his Black Top Blues Tour will be Owen Campbell, a Canberra musician establishing himself as an emerging and talented roots singer / songwriter and slide blues player. A winner of the Declan Affley award for Up and Coming Musician at last years National Folk Festival, Owen has travelled the world spreading his infectious tunes. A major contributor to the album, Matiss Schubert will also be lending his skills as he joins the tour in mid-November. Meeting up with Jack and Owen in Brisbane, Matiss will round-out the tour as it weaves back through NSW to Canberra.
