Is there something wrong with this picture? He's looking for a wife . . . she's only after a good time. He thinks he's never seen her before. But they have a history. Oh--and a kid he doesn't know about. Fate can be a bitch sometimes. As a favor to a friend, Talia Lopez agrees to share her room with a man she believes is gay. It's perfect. They can hang out together . . . commiserate. After all, they've both been tossed overboard for somebody new. Talia's going to take the rejection like a man. Literally. From now on, no more Mr. Nice Guy. She'll love 'em and leave 'em. It's aaaaaalllll good. A case of mistaken identity . . . . Sam Williams the Gay returns to Tiny Town to be a bridesmaid at his sister's wedding. Only, sis trips on the church steps, breaks both hind paws, and wrecks his plans to attend an upcoming Interior Design conference in Frisco. The Front Desk clerk mistakenly tosses Sam the Straight into a room with Talia. He doesn't recognize her as the crazy young bar fly he shared a wild weekend with in his past. She recognizes him, but since when was he gay? What happened? Well, who cares? He was gorgeous then and he's gorgeous now. He's just what the doctor ordered to scratch the itch. Gay...right. She'd fix that in a hurry. Sam thinks she's hot. Damn hot. Bubbly. Julia Roberts on steroids. Just the kind of woman he'd have a five-day fling with . . . if he hadn't sworn he was going to change his ways. He's turning over a new leaf. No more flings. He wants a wife and child before the year is up. So he ain't gonna touch that stuff with a ten-foot pole. Besides, he's supposed to be gay . . . so he's going to take it like a . . . well . . . a woman. He has to. Or she might boot him out on his ear if she discovers he's the wrong Sam. In an effort to temporarily "convert" him, Talia turns up the heat . . . and sets him on fire. Excerpt: "My nickname is Tripod." He joked, as he crossed the room. "You're hilarious. So I guess you didn't-you know-have the operation?" she asked while screwing the caps on her lens case. Stretching her jaw, she opened and shut her eyes a few times to get the lenses to sit properly on her irises. "Hell, no. Everything's still there and it's working just fine." "Suzie did mention that you came across as very straight. I'm just being nosy, I guess. Just tell me when I'm probing too much, okay?" "You got it." Talia turned her head toward him, glanced away then did a sharp double-take. "Holy . . . ." Her gaze flittered up and down in a quick, preliminary sweep, and then started over from the bottom. Dusty brown, well-worn cowboy boots thumping into the carpet came as an invitation to follow the legs up. He wore boot-cut denims faded in all the right places, enhancing a set of well-defined thigh muscles. The bulge at the crotch revealed he had not, in fact, had it chopped off. And he wore no shirt. A tiny shiver coursed up her backbone. Suz was right. He did look like a Chippendale calendar model. Wow! He was tanned, broad of shoulder and narrow of hip, with a decadent little treasure trail of dark hair starting at his navel and disappearing into the waistband of his jeans. His abs were ripped. You could bounce marbles off that belly. Another patch of hair darkened the middle of his chest between a set of pecs that made her glands start producing excess saliva. Good God, she thought. What a waste! And then she finally looked at his face. "Oh. My. God." The floor under her felt as if it cracked wide open. For the first time in seven years, she stood face-to-face with her daughter's father.
