ELECTRONIC: Ambient, ELECTRONIC: Experimental Show all album songs: Hypnofleur Songs Details:

There are unsupported rumours Hilda was hatched from a dinosaur egg and raised by a fairy under a linden tree in central Normandy. As a kid she was deeply impressed by music and paintings from the classical era which led her to higher education and a diploma from L'Ecole des Beaux Arts de Rouen in 1990. While in college at Rouen Hilda bought a 4 track recorder, set it up in her kitchen and fifteen minutes later had recorded "Stood Again Upside the Mountain" (1987), her first song. It's but a few seconds long and is featured along with four other songs from that time on Steeple Remove's 1997 album "The Importance of Being Seeples Remove" (Sordid Sentimental label). In 1996, having recorded kilometres of experimental tapes while making paintings and sculptures, Hilda went off on another take altogether and made her first album, Energetic Bit Flower. Since 1999 she's been producing hauntingly dreamy electro pop trance on her own and a few 3D animated video clips to go with it. Hilda's music has an infectious enthusiasm and overflows with hope and optimism. Her unique musical arrangements are hypnotic, psychedelic and progressive in nature overflowing with woozy bliss! Hilda's voice is quite simply breathtaking. Somewhere between Kate Bush Bjork! Hypnofleur is an album that you will not want to stop playing and although it has a distinctly techno trance feel to it, they are labels that do not do such an inventive piece of work justice.
