Details: Forgetting Yesterday is Sarah Modene's second release: a collection of 10 solo piano compositions. In what is quickly becoming her signature style, Sarah demonstrates her unusually mature ability to craft lyrical, introspective music that speaks to each listener in different ways. Sarah has been writing music since age seven, after stumbling across an interesting chord progression on the piano. Since then, she has written many compositions, most of which she has forgotten- usually intentionally. The few she decides to keep are among the ones you hear on her recordings. After first performing a composition in a student recital, Sarah decided that she would pursue music as a career. Despite the fact that this monumental decision was reached at the wise age of ten, she has never (seriously) rethought this goal. Sarah's music is best described by the listener. While it has been called introspective, exquisite, and vibrant, Sarah believes that in order for one to truly appreciate her music, each individual must determine what they alone think of it. Ultimately, she strives to write from the soul; her music is personal yet universal. Sarah's debut album, Journey, was named among Solo Piano Publications Top Picks of 2007.
