Details: Vir Unis, in daily life known as John Strate-Hootman, introduces himself as a synthesist, drummer, electronic groove creator and sound sculptor. Well, when you are an electronic groove creator, the Groove-label is most likely the place to be. Being influenced by early ambient-artists like Robert Fripp, Brian Eno, David Sylvian/Japan and their later followers Steve Roach, Vidna Obmana, Michael Brook and Future Sound Of London, he mixes experimental sound sculpting with a hybrid of electronic and acoustic grooves. In 1998, his immense talents could be heard for the first time through his collaboration with the duo Ma Ja Le on the CD Imaginarium and the compilation-album The Ambient Expanse on which he contributed a track. These talents were picked up by the master of ambient Steve Roach and lead to their joint adventure Body Electric in 1999. After The Drift Inside and Aeonian Glow, Pulse n Atmo is his third solo-album and what an album it is. Rhythm has an important place on Pulse n Atmo and it is not difficult to hear, Vir Unis has a background as a drummer. Ingenious rhythms of all kinds are heard throughout the album. This, combined with excellent ambient sounds and environmental atmospheres, makes Pulse n Atmo a great and intriguing spacey, dark and sometimes even danceable experience. With Pulse n Atmo Vir Unis has definitely placed himself amongst the masters of ambient.
