Electronic Music with snarky and fun social and political comments from legendary EBM pioneers 10 MP3 Songs ELECTRONIC: Industrial, ELECTRONIC: Experimental Details: Deeper with The Weathermen PRESS RELEASE MAY 2004 The Weathermen emerged out of the mid- 80's "electronic body music" wave, creating a sub-category for themselves that never received a proper name. Combining beat driven melodies and sarcastic social commentary, The Weathermen burst out of their self-imposed anonymity onto the international music scene. What had begun as a private joke soon became a fairly marketable commodity, with over 100,000 records sold, 18 records or CD's, two video clips on heavy rotation on MTV, three European tours and an American Tour, and wow two songs used on the fabulously successful 'Baywatch' series. One Weathermen song , "Poison" even made it to the German Top 50 singles But seeing Pamela Anderson's butt moving in rhythm with their music was going to be all too much for The Weathermen and if in the sixties Andy Warhol predicted that everybody would be famous for 15 minutes, the acceleration of time and the utter domination of the audiovisual media 30 years later reduced drastically that window of glory: The Weathermen decided that they had had their 15 frames of fame and disappeared from the scene. They were going to be missed. Mid-2002, a Weathermen website was set up, in order to give fans the possibility to download all of now unavailable Weathermen music. In a matter of months, 10.000 downloads were registered on the site. Mind you, the mp3 are there for free. Bruce had been living in a winebango in the Mojave Desert in California, trying to escape from paying allemonies to Susanna Stammer. He had worked for several years as janitor at the Betty Ford Clinic, in Beverly Hills, Ca. and was Jean-Claude Van Damme's driver... Jimmyjoe Snark III worked with Austrian performance artist Gerhard Strudel, conceptor of the famous Big Strudel Act, Small Strudel Act, Medium Strudel Act and Venice's Biennale all time favorite 'One Last Strudel for The Road".

Surprisingly enough, they bumped into each other late 2002, in an internet chat room. Bruce's nickname was Pink Shoe while Suzanna12458 was obviously Jimmyjoe's moniker. Pink Shoe was looking to sing in a country-western band while Suzanna12458 was a western-country band looking for a singer. They were very disappointed when they met at Chicago's Central Station, both wearing a blue coat and a copy of "Gardens And Flowers, the sequel" in the left hand. Beware of the internet, boys and girls, you never know who you're talking to. This is the result of their new work. The music was done in jimmyjoe's homestudio and sent via DSL to Bruce's winnebango in California. Comfy little motor he has. Deeper With The Weathermen album will be released spring 2004 thru Urgence Disks and Fire-zone records and soon-to-be announced distribution in the USA and the UK. The CD is also on sale on The Weathermen's website.
