Between traveling cross-country, falling in love, and searching for peace of mind, Laura Meyer, VH1 Song of the Year Winner, has crossed many divides. Share her swirling path on her brand new release. 10 MP3 Songs FOLK: like Joni, FOLK: Modern Folk Details: Laura Meyer is forever trying to find her home. At the same time she doesn't really want to find it because the journey is far too much fun. She sings: The present is an exotic destination. Few have ever been. Life is not a sentence... And time is not my friend. Her natural reflex is to pounce upon any opportunity which presents itself, which has led to twenty-two years of colorful twists and turns. Her awareness of life's fleetingness informs the way she lives and the way she sings. She likens her existence to riding a tire swing fast and slow, high and low. Circular and always returning to the same core, and yet always fresh and exhilarating. She enjoys watching thoughts and questions accumulate like rain drops on a warm summer afternoon, and she likes to translate them in her notebooks. Laura has a weakness for pretty notebooks, which serve as portals to her favorite adventures thus far. Here in Across the Great Divide you are invited to partake in her process of revolving. She is currently living in Manhattan, where she has a stubborn habit of collecting treasure from the street, much to her roommates frustration. She is a vine scaling walls, trying to find roots through thick cement and forever reaching towards the stars. Often she escapes to somewhere where the air is clean much like Sesame Street. She dances clumsily and sings honestly. Experiencing her songs is similar to making maple syrup in a sugar shack on a crisp Vermont day. Her voice has been likened to Suzanne Vega since long before she began to sing (publicly, that is Lauras mother has plenty of video footage documenting The Princess Song, circa 1987.) Her friends describe her as naturally awkward and awesomely goofy, and VH1 Song of the Year thinks enough of Love Isn't Enough to award it Second Place in the Folk category. Laura likes the idea of folk as in the people, and she believes her songs will change the world. Laura is currently attending NYUs Gallatin School of Individualized Study, her fourth university in four years (like stated above, she answers when opportunity knocks). She has recently played at New York venues such as CBGBs Lounge and Gallery, Pianos, the Lions Den, and the legendary Bitter End. The road is forever beckoning, and she is booking summer shows as you read this. She would like to be your friend its as easy as going to myspace.com/laurameyermusic. You can also join her mailing list for updates and tour information by visiting laurameyer.net. Hope to see you on the next journey!
