Since then, he has pursued a playing style consistent with the tradition of the great singer-songwriters. Being self taught, it took him several years to solidify his talent and style. Post education brought him to acoustic circles where he met musicians who's individual talents spanned the gamut of musical genres. There he honed the skills necessary to grease the wheel of a live show. After playing in several bands, and recording his first solo album, the decision was made to pursue a career as a solo acoustic artist. His journey has taken him across america and back home again on a tour of clubs, coffee houses, and hole-in-the-wall bars, where he continues to play for capacity crowds. Jeremiah has been inundated with styles and musical flavors from wherever that road led, and the lessons learned are evident in the music he plays.
