"Ask any member of this band that question and you might get four different answers states lead singer Jeff Dixon, "I think of it as therapy. An introspective soundtrack to everyday life. when you're down at the bottom, frustration and anger take over. But there is always hope for a better tomorrow. These are the kind of emotions people deal with everyday." Forged from the ashes of other local New Jersey bands, guitarist Mike Koenig and drummer L.j. Gravine first began to write in early 2001. Dave Neabore, bassist from such notable bands as Dog Eat Dog and Mucky Pup, soon came on board to strengthen and polish their ideas. After months of failed auditions and false starts, the trio stumbled upon an unknown, unproven, and somewhat reluctant singer, Jeff Dixon. With his powerful voice, and his dark lyrics and infectious choruses, the puzzle was finally complete, and LowBuz was born. The band immediately took to the studio and completed their debut self-titled EP. With music ranging from heavy and loud, to moody and melodic, LowBuz has a unique sound all its own.
