After a few years at Penn State University, Mike moved to Phoenix, Arizona and immediately got a gig in a folk duo called Smith and Breen performing at the Salt Cellar restaurant and bar. During this time Mike met many musicians and songwriters including Darcie Deaville, now from Austin, Texas, whom he collaborated with on stage and in the studio and co-wrote her much acclaimed song Icy Barrel of a Loaded Gun on her debut CD and also on her Redwing release Tornado in Slo Mo. During the late 70s and early 80s Mike performed at the Windmill Dinner Theater in Scottsdale, Arizona as a member of The Barnstormers a New Christy Minstrel style group. After a brief stint as a booking agent Mike took up the electric guitar and began playing country music with Jim Bartlett and The Blue Hollar Band who worked consistently doing corporate events and private parties. This led to a stint with several bands at an 1880s Western Town called Rawhide and after a few years Mike got the call to join the Red River Opry Band that producer Mark Prentice was putting together for a 1000 seat venue in Tempe that featured some of the greatest players in town including Ed Black, members of the Herndon Brothers and the owner of Mr. Luckys, the legendary J David Sloan. Mike released 2 Cds in the nineties to critical acclaim and started to have other artists record his songs which eventually led to a passion for recording. Also, during this period of time Mike got his first bender telecaster which would eventually lead him to write and record a ground breaking CD called Mescal Mary and Other B Bender Guitar Instrumentals. The 1990s found Mike freelancing with various bands as well as playing guitar for country stars that would come through town including Hank Thompson, Skip Ewing and John McKuen.
