The core members, Allison Russell and Awna Teixeira, joined forces in late 2006 with musician and luthier, Benny Sidelinger. He built several instruments that the band plays. Po' Girl showcases a variety of instruments, including gutbucket bass (built by Awna), glockenspiel, clarinet, accordion, banjo, dobro, guitar and piano; twelve in all and all members frequently change instruments with each song, playing with a proficiency that can only be achieved by fanatical practice and a gifted ear. The talented, touring band has two principal singer/songwriters who front the group. Allison Russell from Montreal and Awna Teixeira from Toronto hit the musical road at a tender age and lived to sing their tales. In the last year they have traveled to 13 countries sharing their "echoes of speakeasy jazz, the western lament and the accordion-strapped ghosts of European folk." These musical gypsies recorded their newest album in Austin this past summer and have produced a sound that is better than any previous Po' Girl album to date. You'll be happy you own this record - it's a gem.
