They have emerged as veterans of the Los Angeles rock pop scene through five years of tours, shows and releases. Banner Day has shared the stage with such acts as Palo Alto, Rilo Kiley, and Dios Malos at such venues as the Troubadour, the Knitting Factory, Koos Caf and countless other bars and coffee houses around Southern California. They have also logged time on the road with tours of the western United States. After self-releasing their own EP, Volcano, Banner Day joined Toy Records to release a split record with the girl garage rock duo Katie the Pest, as well as the upcoming Following Stars EP. Earlier incarnations of the band were said to have been comparable to bands like Jimmy Eat World, Pavement and Television, blending styles of punk, pop and rock. Recent member shifts have guided them in a different direction. Now more of a stripped down approach has taken Banner Days sound into a new realm in the footsteps of Paul Westerberg or the New Amsterdams. Stronger emphasis on solid songwriting and creative instrumentation have brought Banner Day into its peak.
