As a young boy Saeed was not allowed to play music. His parents forbade music due to the lack of opportunity in his future as a musician. Saeed, a child prodigy, knew he was blessed with the gift of music and left his house prior to becoming a teenager to pursue his musical dreams. As a teenager Saeed dropped out of school to become a Music Teacher for Ghanas Public Schools teaching all over Ghana. One evening at a school a man walked by and heard Saeeds music. It stopped him in his tracks and he invited Saeed to interview with the National Dance Ensemble, Ghanas National Group. After his interview he was accepted into the group and traveled with them all over the world performing, teaching, and studying music from many different languages. Saeed performed many places, as well as, for many different people including the Queen of England, Bill Clinton, and other world leaders. After five years with Ghanas National Dance Ensemble, Saeed resigned and moved to London, England. In England Saeed performed and recorded a CD with Brekete, a Traditional African group from Ghana. After two years in London, Saeed followed the American Dream and adventured to the United States. He moved to Portland, Oregon, where he played professionally and recorded music with other Ghanaian and American musicians such as Obo Addy and White Rhino, as well as taught for schools and businesses ranging from elementary to the university level. His journey was not over. Saeed moved to Whidbey Island, Washington where he currently resides. Saeed now teaches and performs in the Pacific Northwest as well as around the country.
