In recent years, she has engaged in music composition. Snowflake Lullabies began on a quiet, wintry evening in Michigan. Sulaine walked up her front steps in a gentle snow breathing in the starry night. She tilted her face to the sky and closed her eyes to feel the soft flakes fall on her cheeks. She says: Seeing and feeling the beautiful snow warmed me in the cold air. I knew there was something precious and magical in the world. It was the way I felt about my children, as babies, when I rocked them to sleep at night. Sulaine continues to compose childrens songs as well as instrumental works in the classical genre.
