Shown on a six story, curved screen audiences were awestruck by its unparalleled clarity of images. Partnered, in perfect harmony, with these incredible visuals was the song Ojibway Country written and performed by Bill Houston. In the decade following, Bill composed material for several films, documentaries and commercials, established a music publishing company, developed his own small record company, Lone Wolf Productions Ltd., and together with producer Shelby Gregory released his first full length album "The King of White Otter Lake". The title track from this album tells the tale of Jimmy McQuat, a persistent and ingenious man who built a castle on White Otter Lake near Ignace, Ontario. Jimmy became a legend and the song became Bill Houstons most published and reproduced work. "The King of White Otter Lake" even made it into public school songbooks where it is used to teach, not only music, but geography, history and comparative literature. In spite of his success in Toronto, Bill realized his heart and the roots of his music, the land and the people he most frequently wrote about, were in the north. He missed his Northwestern Ontario home and decided to return. Marriage, two children and full time work grounded Bill in Thunder Bay. However, he continued to write music and play with local musicians whenever he could. In 1997, together with producers George Gregorovich, and Sean Mundy and with a host of other talented Thunder Bay musicians, Bill released an 11 song CD, "North of Superior". He was quickly booked up solid. People were eager to hear his songs both old and new, many of which celebrate the beauty and heritage of Northwestern Ontario. Longtime fans and newcomers alike turned out in large numbers to welcome Bill back to the stage. Since that time, Bill has continued to play for appreciative audiences in the region and elsewhere at house concerts, fundraisers, cafes, schools and festivals. However, with only a small portion of his songs available to the public Bill decided it was time for another CD. The result is "Bring Back the Music", a 14 song CD, released in the summer of 2006. With a diversity of styles from ragtime to lullaby and topics from historic rail lines to prescription drugs this wonderful collection once again illuminates the incredible songwriting talent of Bill Houston. Backed by renowned musicians such as Chris Whiteley, Anne Lindsay and Grit Laskin and utilizing the skills of award winning producer Paul Mills, Bill's songs possess the rare quality that can please both traditional folk preferences and current musical tastes. Makes great travel music too! Listen to it in the car or on your iPod. Check out billhouston.ca for more information.
