The music on Dont Lick A Flagpole When Its Cold covers musical styles that span a generation of American popular music. The title cut, Dont Lick A Flagpole When Its Cold is a humorous reggae-flavored tune about making good choices. Funky, the Math Monkey finds the artist singing and talking about his fictitious pet monkey who loves math. Musically, Nyes monkey also happens to love disco, so the music is reminiscent of what one might hear in the movie Saturday Night Fever. ARITHMETIC is a funk/hip hop song about math phobia, in which Nye has a chance to express his own struggles with understanding math in elementary school. Bob Ruth is a quirky folk song of a relationship that starts out bad, but ends happily ever after. The song could be about any couple, but it isnt until the last two lines that the songwriter reveals its actually about two hamsters in a cage who fight all the time, until they realize that their survival depends on forgiveness, love, and respect. When I Listen, Im Silent is song about two different words with all the same letters (anagrams) that are closely connected by their meaning. Feeding Time At The Zoo is the obligatory school lunch song, but with a different twist. Paul Nye not only sings and entertains children, but he works and interacts with them on a daily basis. He knows what kids like, how they think, and what they listen to, and has created an album of un-Barney-like fun and melodic music that the whole family will enjoy listening to over and over again.
