The same compositional energy propels Sevada's second album, 1999's Years of Solitude. The CD opens with a rowdy, flagrantly sexy Armenian tune featuring Ararat Petrosian's duduk. From then on, Sevada embarks on a more meditative tour, reaching for discreet spaces of introspection that do justice to the album's title. Over all, Years of Solitude's is a mellower sound compared to Palpitation of Soul, making for a succession of wistful, expansive moments. Many of the compositions are also plain gorgeous, sometimes delivered through Petrosian's and Andre Harutyunyan's traditional Armenian instruments. People who are interested in should consider this download.
