Future Rock, synth-pop, dance music, lead singer is a robot who sings over catchy analog melodies backed by heart pounding beats...this music will Wow your imagination. 16 MP3 Songs ELECTRONIC: Pop Crossover, ROCK: Modern Rock Details: When circuits are twisted and bent, and re-programming and re-wiring are complete... the end result is a sparkling glimpse of the future known as The Robotic Subwaymen. This musical group led by its creator, CIVO (Cyborg Incorporates Vocal Organization), is speeding out of the underground like the bullet train. There are intricate layers of synthesizers backed by driving drumbeats and all fronted with melodic vocoder lyrics. The Robotic Subwaymen have recorded and made available to the general public an album titled 2083. It is the group's initial release and provides the listener with the full spectrum of the Subwaymen's versatility. The group shows elements of indie rock, electro, synth pop, and dance all done in consistent Robotic Subwaymen fashion. There can be no doubting that the group's influences include DEVO, Kraftwerk, Zapp, Radiohead, Polysics, and other similar acts. From ambient to dancey... thru to full on rock, the Robotic Subwaymen do it all. The group is strikingly visual in its presentation. Inspired by the progressive Japanese robotic movement (i.e. Robodex, etc.), the look is equally exciting as the music. Civo's bright, white robot suit contrasts with the rest of the members' pitch black robot uniforms. This visual stimulus [with color schemes of black, purple, and glowing green] give the Robotic Subwaymen an aura of intense neon. The group is based in the U.S., but has had an incredible appeal in Japan (undoubtedly due to its heavy influence by Japanese culture, Robodex, and the film "Lost in Translation"). Recently, the group has ventured across the Earth's Pacific Ocean to Hong Kong and Tokyo, Japan. While in Asia, the group did promotion for 2083, as well as gave a sneak peek into their follow-up recording, Technology, expected out sometime in 2005. Gregg Tauriac Concept inspiration: I watched the movie "Lost in Translation", did some research on Tokyo and robots, discovered Robodex (robot convention) went out and brought a synthesizer and the rest is history. Influences: Devo, Kraftwerk, Zapp, Radiohead, Polysics Musical taste: Frank Sinatra, Radiohead, Ultra-lounge, Indie-rock, AIR Currently work as: graphic artist Likes: Jerry Lewis movies, Pixar animation, Robotics! , Japanese culture, SINATRA People I would like to meet: Sofia Coppola, Bill Murray, Johnny Depp, Tom Yorke, Prince Recent life Activity: went to Hong Kong and Tokyo Highlights: In Hong Kong I performed two Sinatra songs with a jazz band in Langham Place Hotel, then had a meeting with EMI. In Tokyo I met with a cutting edge producer, then stood before the "Great Buddha" of Kamakura, and then had two drinks in the Park Hyatt Hotel (Lost in Translation) met some very nice people there. What's next: Hope to establish a close connection with Tokyo, London, Hong Kong, Paris and all places in between! Can't wait to release my follow up to "2083" titled "technology" it has about 22 tracks. It's more personal, and more direct, CIVO (cyborg incorporates a vocal organization.) is introduced as the frontman on this CD, he's the one in white. I'm interested in the robotic movement in Japan (Robodex) and hope to be involved some sort of way. From this I hope to receive interest from record labels. The possibilities are endless, as track 2 says "all inside", I have it all inside! Thanks for Reading!

Gregg
