"America at its Best." This Historical Western Fiction follows the true story of the town of Forest City, Iowa, receiving a Spanish-American War cannon from the U.S. Government in the year 1899 and some of the events surrounding actual citizens of Forest City from 1858-1899. The story combines some of the history of the settling of the Indian Territory and of Winnebago County, Iowa. U.S. Marshal Clay Owen, who is from the Indian Territory' takes the train to Mare Island in California to pick up a cannon that was captured during the Spanish-American War and transports it by train to Forest City. A thirteen-year-old boy named Dakota, who is of mixed blood, accompanies him. While in Iowa, they inquire about Dakota's great-grandparents who had lived in Puckerbrush (Forest City). This book follows the fictitious characters of Willard and Sally Duncan and their two children, who were twins, named Diana and Dennis. They settle in Forest City until 1867 and then head west. While the family was traveling through Arizona, following the Butterfield Overland Trail, a young Apache Indian Brave captures Diane and takes her for his bride. It tells the heartwarming story of a brother's search for his sister, who was captured by the Indians, and his dedication to her, postponing any life for himself.
