Mixed and produced by none other than the legendary Scientist, Life is truly close to the heart of dub reggae. About Ijahlar: Joseph Emmanuel Connor (a.k.a Zaro) is no stranger to the music scene; his musical exploits began in his early teens, and at 15 he was a member of a string band of siblings and close relatives called the Missing Brothers, playing Guera shortly before turning to the bath-pan bass. At 17, Zaro took up the 12-string acoustic guitar, which further helped to develop his interest in the discipline; he spent quite a bit of time listening to a variety of music, including calypso, reggae and soul, and had grown to the point where he was capable of leading the band. Zaro was responsible for renaming the group to he Musical Brothers, which became a fullyelectric outfit. It was in this setting that Zaros passion for reggae music grew, combined with the influential songs of Steel Pulse, Aswad, Dennis Brown, Bob Marley The Wailers, and Israel brations. Growing up in the 60s at a time of learned entertainment and Bob Marleys Influence had a deep influence on Jey. At that time, competitive sound systems such as Sir Coxgon Hi Fi, Duk Reid Hi Fi, King tubby, and Prince Buster among many others were hired out to play in any part of the country, and it was into this scene that Jey grew and met his producer Ijahla, who encouraged Jey to get serious about his music and put aside everything else to bring his music to the people.
