The Queen is dead. Long live the Queen. Estine always knew this day would come, but she'd prayed that her mother would live a long and healthy life. Now, with Queen Danu dead, Estine must find the courage to step into her mother's shoes and lead her people. Rhonan, one time leader of the war band, returns from Rome with Mardox, Estine's cousin, to find that his former lover, a woman who has haunted his dreams and still inflames his passions, now leads their people. Despite the customs of their tribe, Mardox has no intention of letting Estine rule her people in peace, not when he stands next in line. Can the passion sparked at the fires of Beltane survive the pressure of leadership, or the plots of a dangerous man now tainted by the teachings of Rome? Excerpt: Slowly, she wrapped her arms around his neck and brushed her mouth over his, a soft tingle claiming her lips at the first touch. He didn't move. She teased the tip of her tongue slowly along his lips, outlining his mouth. He shivered and a low moan rumbled in the back of his throat. His hand pressed against her back, bringing her closer, but she tensed, holding her ground. He wanted her to just act . . . then he had to let her take the lead. "No, don't," she said. "You wanted me to show you, remember?" "Yes, I do." His smile touched her heart. "Then let me try this. Let me set the pace." He nodded and let his hand fall away from her back. "I am in your capable hands, Esi." She slid her hands into his hair, testing the texture, teasing the long locks around her fingers. She stared into his eyes, searching for some sign that he would pull away, or try to take control, but it wasn't there. He trusted her. Not the daughter of the queen, but the woman. A woman he wanted as his own, if only for the night. I love him. Not something she dared to tell him right now. Not at the fires. She would tell him later, if there was a later for them. Don't think that way! Her lips claimed his. Soft, yet hard at the same time. His lips parted beneath hers as she delved her tongue into his mouth, tasting him, touching as he had touched her. He resisted, for a moment, his muscles tensing, his need to take her lips, to take control of the kiss, evident in the way he shifted beneath her touch. Something hard pressed against her bottom. For a moment, she didn't know what it was, and then she blushed. But a thrill raced through her at the same time. Obviously, her actions pleased him. His tongue dueled with hers, testing her limits as she deepened the kiss. He groaned, his hands brushed against her sides, his shoulders tight as he struggled to let her keep control of the kiss. A struggle he lost. His hands moved to her shoulders, his grip firm as he pulled back. "I think, unless you want everyone to see, we should move away from the fires before we go any further, my Esi," he said, his voice little more than a low growl. Estine nodded and slipped out of his grasp. The last thing she needed was for the entire village to see her first time. Such things were normal . . . a celebration of life beneath the stars and around the fires, and nearby, more than a dozen couples and triads already enjoyed the gift of love, life and pleasure. Their naked bodies entwined, they cared not who might see. This was a part of Beltane. Yet, she wanted - no - needed her first time to be private. Special. For them alone. "I know of a place, away from the fires, where we won't be disturbed." "Good. Lead the way, my Beltane lass."
