Details: From Amazon.com Sorry's 3rd album the RSVP ep rethreads some of the needles from Non-Winner and It Pays to Pay Attention, both in the harmonies of brothers Alan and Stephen Brozovich and in the melodic poppiness of the songs themselves. But the overall feeling of the RSVP ep is moodier than previous records. The songs rush less and breathe more, and the themes sound more reflective than tongue-in-cheek -- childhood memories, the state of love mid-marriage, the dreariness of office worklife. When on "Lied Like the Rug" they ask "what do all our days amount to?" you get the sense that they have logged some serious hours pondering an answer. The harmony in the phrase suggests that maybe, just maybe, pop music is part of their reply.
