She discovered her talent for the piano early at age three, but did not pursue a career in music, graduating from the University of Colorado in Business. School years were spent accompanying music and vocal groups, studying the piano and creating her own arrangements of her favorite songs. The piano remained a gratifying hobby throughout life. After the untimely loss of her mother, Christine immersed herself in her music. She began composing, releasing her heartfelt emotions and inspiring her listeners. In 1991, she debuted on Sugo Record's solo piano compilation featuring four of the most gifted pianists in the U.S. titled Piano Portraits and later, Summer Stories. These compositions were also featured on Muzak channels. Christine continues to compose and record her piano compositions, recently adding instrumental arrangements to some of her music. Playing the piano is such an emotional release and reflection of my life's experiences and feelings, and has always been an extremely gratifying way to express myself, often an escape. I feel so fortunate to have the support of my family and friends, which encourages me to pursue my dream. Christine
