Reggie Webb began his expedition towards the music industry in 1997 as apart of a four-man group named "Broken Souls". This group rapidly gained recognition in Baltimore's underground scene. The label "A Roughtime Music" put out several compilations that landed in various stores between Baltimore and D.C., and Webb was heavily featured on numerous songs. Due to unethical business practices by the labels CEO, Webb's relationship with the record label ended in 1999. After this experience he then migrated to Virginia where he became affiliated with another label "Third Eye Entertainment". The label acquired interest in Webb from the buzz he created from his local exposure in Baltimore and D.C. Pete Twist, (the labels CEO and top producer) introduced Webb to another market of Hip Hop.
