About the Band Freedom and Whiskey is a guitar rock band from Louisville, Kentucky. There are three basic members in the group: Bill Goins, Mike Huettig and Griffin P. Torrance. Tina Goins also plays a large role helping the band behind the scenes. Bill and Mike wrote and composed most of Freedom and Whiskey's material. Bill sings and plays acoustic and slide guitar. Mike plays lead guitar, slide and also sings. Griffin plays bass. Mike also laid down the drum tracks for their first album. Both Griffin and Tina contributed lyrics, ideas, and countless hours of help in developing the project. Through the years the members played in several bands and clubs together under different names but always maintained a strong musical bond and friendship with each other and other local musicians. The creation of Freedom and Whiskey occured around august of 2001. Bill was working in his home studio doing some serious writing, digital recording and production work and Mike had hit the "big time" playing with another popular group called Days of the New. When Bill and Mike got together to start recording, Mike was still working with Days of the New. Todd Smith, a local musician and producer himself, had also worked with Days of the New in the production of a previous album. Todd agreed to help with the project and started making the arrangements. His knowledge proved to be immeasurable. The band booked Treasure Isle

Studio in Nashville, Tennessee and set out to record their self-titled album. The album also includes other artist such as Todd Smith, Mark Hoekstra, Rob Edwards, Debbra Belt and Joyce Green.
