Details: Boston singer-songwriter Karaugh Brown announces the release of a new album, Favorite Daughter. Favorite Daughter is the follow-up to Browns 2002 Bill Morrissey-produced release, One Round Orange, which prompted a nomination from the Boston Music Awards for Best New Singer/Songwriter that same year. Brown was critically lauded by Sing Out! magazine, Performing Songwriter magazine and noted as an artist to watch by Scott Alarik of the Boston Globe and Ted Drozdowski of the Boston Phoenix. As a result, Brown was invited to contribute a track from One Round Orange to Signature Sounds Respond II compilation, which included such luminaries as Suzanne Vega, Joan Baez, Ani Difranco and the Indigo Girls. Karaugh Brown returned to Cambridges Hi-N-Dry studio last November to record Favorite Daughter, with co-producers Billy Conway (Twinemen, Morphine) and Dave Westner (Jabe). Sean Staples (Resophonics) came on board to play mandolin and Rob Laurens played bass. The group focused on creating Favorite Daughters sound, using One Round Orange as a starting point. Browns songs have developed into something sophisticated and intensely personal over the past two years. She has begun to explore themes of love and affirmation apart from One Round Oranges focus on mystery and sadness. Favorite Daughter, like One Round Orange, is suffused with images of classical art and Hopper-esque American landscapes, but it is also an album about family and the inextricable connections of the heart to home, parent and the transformative power of adulthood. The band has crafted a lush, vivid and haunting music to support Browns work. Full of the gritty Americana that birthed her writing voice, Favorite Daughter is infectious and real, immediate to the ear and truthful to the head and heart.
