FOLK: Folk Pop, FOLK: like Ani Details: Erin Victoria McCabe Singer-Songwriter Indiana born, Colorado grown and Kansas City polished, singer-songwriter Erin McCabe hits the road with her soul-filled music. McCabe's refreshing approach and remarkable vocals define her truly unique style. Each song has a different flavor and an emotional depth that decidedly gets your attention. When trying to pin down just who Erin McCabe sounds like, some come close. But in the end, her sound is all her own. It all began at the end of a summer of sitting 'round the campfire. While working at a new thought hippy camp, she learned her first guitar chord. That chord grew into music that puts a voice to her deep passion. In 1999, while teaching elementary school in Colorado, McCabe bought her first guitar. She began writing music and frequenting open-mic nights at Denver's Mead Street Station hosted by the infamous Tony Padilla. A few months before departing for Kansas City, she had a collision course with Denver based band, Soda Wagon (also doubled as Transhypnotic) and they invited her along for a ride. They rocked and rolled until her departure. While a full-time student in Kansas City, McCabe released two albums. 'Come On' was recorded in Denver with the excellent talent and creativity of Soda Wagon. The cd was co-produced with Santa Monica based solo artist, Jake Hamilton. The second cd, 'Believe It,' was an amazing spiritual endeavor merging her musical talents with the expertise of recording engineer and musician Ken Rinehart. McCabe performed throughout the Kansas City area while attending Unity Institute of Religious Studies. An ordained Unity minister, Rev. McCabe travels the country with her music and message, weaving together the realms of the secular and the sacred. No matter the venue-a coffee shop, local hot spot or Unity Center-McCabe inspires listeners with a unique blend of passion, intrigue and spirit.
