I sang in the church choir, however, I did not participate, as I should have. During my intermediate level of schooling, I began participating in singing on the choir. I have a deep and strong love for music. At around the ninth grade, I realized that I was able to do more with my voice than most people. I realized that I had tremendous voice control. At times, I was astounded at the development of my own voice. In addition to singing, I have played percussion instruments throughout high school. At present, I am teaching myself how to play the keyboard by ear. I think I am doing a pretty good job! I have developed an ear for music. By doing so, it has made it easier for me to play the keyboard. Im still not Mozart but gradually I am developing this hidden talent. It inspires me to sing and write music. Recently, I wrote a song. I have received a degree in electrical engineering technology from Piedmont Technical College. Currently, I am pursuing a degree in engineering graphics technology. My anticipated graduation date is December 2001. I am gaining experience in my area of expertise through employment at Cutler Hammer in Greenwood, South Carolina where I am an electrical drafter. My job consist of drawing schematics for medium voltage transformers. I am surrounded by people who love to sing. At school, I sing with my peers doing breaks and also on the school choir. I have also been involved in singing on the choir at Lander University. My weekends are oftentimes booked with singing engagements for weddings and church functions. I spend a lot of time at choir rehearsals. In 1997 I met three guys who wanted to form a group. Our voices blended well. We song at several shows and church programs. With our peers, our group name, Fomo became very popular. In 1998 the group separated to pursue other interest. Later, I began to sing with just one of the group members. We also sang at shows. The both of us are still singing. We are dedicated to the music in a way that keeps us together. My future plans involve being a singer and a musician. I further plan to enhance my skills where it benefits me best as an artist. If music is not conducive to my talents, I will utilize my knowledge in electronics. My hobbies are playing the keyboard, singing, playing basketball, and hanging out with my friends.
