Their first album, Old Gray Road, was nominated for three "88.1 WYCE Jammy Awards" and sold more than 500 copies. Now the band has carefully crafted their follow up album, Heirloom. Heirloom is an interpretation of the generations of American music that has preceded it as well as it is a forging into the future of roots music. The follow up album was recorded in a 100 year old barn in Kalamazoo and has a rich, resonate quality that takes listeners to a certain place. The musicians pulled inspiration from historical events, love, loss, and societal observations from their own lives to write the thirteen original tracks on Heirloom. The result is a blend that evokes true emotion while showcasing Who Hit Johns versatile vocal, lyrical, and instrumental stylings.
