Ghast is the story of two police detectives with a volatile romantic history, forced to work together to track down one of the cleverest, most fiendish killers the Dark Continent has ever seen. Set against the exotic background of South Africa, Ghast tells the story of Daniel Tillinghast, a matchless virtuoso when it comes to creating an endless symphony of pain for innocent young women. As Holly Khambatti and Fox Van Horne struggle to resist their passionate desire for each other and track down the elusive serial killer, the reluctant lovers face their feelings and are wrenched violently apart. As Fox looks for the woman he threw away-the one who has stolen his heart-it becomes obvious he is not the only one hunting her. Will Fox find Holly in time, or will Ghast enjoy his next victim? Special Content Alert: Serial killer Excerpt: As he began reading, wetness seeped through the fabric of his khaki pants. Whoever left the laptop had spilled some of their drink. The seat of the chair was soaking wet, and he'd sat in it before he'd noticed the spill. Damn. He grimaced in distaste, but the computer's message so intrigued him he merely hunkered down, forgetting his discomfort. As he read he began to realize this laptop did indeed reek of terrorist destruction. "Call me Ghast. Think Jack the Ripper of London infamy and you'd be on the right track. But the Ripper stopped somewhere around five women, and I've lost count. If there's a Hell, I'm sure I'll end up in its deepest fiery pit. But not for a while yet-my work is far from done. "I'm sitting in an airport waiting for my flight with time to kill. In these days of terrorism and frantic heightened security, 'a little time' can drag on for hours. Hopefully enough time to tell my tale. Here comes the sweet young thing with my Angel Tears. Her drink. I like to think I'm savoring her blood. But I'm getting ahead of myself. The waitress just told me my flight is delayed again, so I certainly have time. She's my type. I'd describe her, but then you could find me, and that won't do. Suffice it to say, she's pretty. All my women were. Obviously, a lot of what I'm about to tell you is guesswork. I can't be everywhere; I'm not God. Well, not always. This is the story as best I know it. Some people told me their portion for the price of a beer; others, I wrenched it free while I displayed their innards on a slab. So just relax and read my tale. I hope you find it intriguing. "Oh, stop looking around, Sgt. Akbar. I might walk right by and you'd never notice. Don't look for me to hold your hand or answer your questions. I won't be here. I've better things to do. Just to make sure you take me seriously, I've left you a little present. Don't bother getting up; it's right at your left foot. Nudge it open with your shoe. I'll be seeing you." Akbar stared into the shadows beneath the chair until he spied a balled up lounge napkin nestled near his left foot. Not wanting to expose his wet ass, he nudged the napkin open with the toe of his shoe. What he saw oozing inside jerked him skyward, screaming like a school girl. It had been part of his wife less than three hours earlier. As he shot out of the chair, the spilled drink-actually quick-set glue-held on like a pit bull, tearing a two inch patch of soft flesh from each bare leg. His screams flooded the small terminal, disturbing air traffic for hours. A day later the chief of airport security sat in his cool office sipping a cup of hot chai tea. Curious as a monkey, he surrendered to temptation and opened the laptop, daring to bring Pandora's Box to life. After a few minutes of eye-popping reading, he frantically reached for his phone and called the South African Police headquarters. The Biter had resurfaced.
