After experiencing the creativity and lyrical talent of A. Wolf for the first time, you will ask yourself "Can it get any better then this?" We have all heard how far the pen can be pushed and how creative Hip Hop can be, especially with the 2003 release of Outkast's Grammy Award winning album "Speakerbox, The Love Below. Miseries Company definitely pushes that envelope. A. Wolf delivers everything from hardcore battle rap to a 50's sound that is sure to attack audiences around the world and of all genres, Rock, Hip Hop and Pop alike. To put it another way, Miseries Company takes you to a time when Hip Hop's creativity was un-matched and un-touched by any other art form of music. Back when the first priority was to please the ear drum of the buyer. At the same time, A. Wolf brings you this sense of commercial appeal in a way that you haven't heard since music fans were lost in the mind of Jim Morrison in the 60's. During this journey that Miseries Company brings you on you can almost sense every emotion that A. Wolf was feeling at the time he wrote each song. From the love he has for Hip Hop to the hatred he has for its recent direction. This is a powerful album from beginning to end, to say the least. In closing, Here is an album that hides the optimism, but has plenty of it. This is the album you always crave after the dark times seem to be setting in. This is the genius of San Francisco, California's A. Wolf.
