Organics have been performing and composing since 1997. The group are currently playing a highly regarded friday night jazz session in Slattery's of Rathmines, one of Dublin's longest jazz residencies. For the past 3 years the trio have been the jam-session house band at the Cork International jazz festival and have performed throughout the country at music festivals in Dublin, Bray, Birr, Galway, Waterford, Omagh, Belfast. In 2001, the group were booked as a support group to Gil Scott-Heron in Vicar Street and in 2004 were critically acclaimed for their group performance with Saxophonist Bobby Watson (Art Blakey + The Jazz Messengers) at the 2004 Cork Jazz festival. Recent support slots include performing before Bugge Wesseltuft at the 2005 Bud Rising Festival in Dublin. Organics feature three of Ireland's finest young jazz musicians Justin Carroll ( Hammond Organ ), John Moriarty ( Guitar ) and Kevin Brady ( Drums ) Their time as a trio has been marked by a seriousness about repertoire and playing together which has produced a gradual musical evolution. Organics natural chemistry was reinforced by shared musical aims from an early stage. While embracing the swinging sensibilities and tradition of the organ-trio set-up, the group have set their sights on creating and playing their own material, and on getting a wider collective knowledge of different musical styles. Drawing on influences from The Blues to the American song-book to a unique blend of soul and groove, this modern Hammond Organ trio continue to compose and perform an original mix of improvised music.
