Whitney Steele started out with a rock star name and a dream to match. This Arizona native knew from an early age that she was put on this earth to sing and everyone around her knew it too. Growing up, Whitney could always be found entertaining before a live audience in the latest musical and eventually moved on to singing The National Anthem on televised football games. This was only the beginning of the dream for Whitney. Hollywood kept calling! It was just after high school Whitney loaded up her Jeep and set off to fulfill her destiny. She was soon singing back up for many different artists and lending her voice to sing on movie trailers and movies to pay the bills. Though she loved every minute of having the opportunity to work on these diverse projects, Whitney had a voice of her own and felt she needed to use it. Whitney met up with songwriter/producer Scott Miller and the pieces started falling together. The pair began writing and recording at The Hit House and soon after, Whitney was chosen to be the first artist as part of Westlake Recording Studios artist development program where the two of them recorded four more songs. Whitney's music was put up on several different websites to discover the reaction she would obtain from the public. With over 9,000 hits in the first three months, Whitney held the number one, two, and three spots on the charts with the songs she had just recorded. Her latest achievement is a song she wrote and recorded with lead singer, Robin Wilson from The Gin Blossoms. "You Won't See Me Crying" will be on her cd due to be released in March of 2007. Her first music video production of Storm Warning will be released in November of 2006. With no plan of stopping any time soon, Whitney is extremely passionate about her music and will carry on sharing her gift as she feels she was put on earth to do. I have enjoyed every minute of my journey thus far and I am looking forward to whats in store for the future." - Whitney
