Poetry coupled with electronic music 20 MP3 Songs SPOKEN WORD: Poetry, ELECTRONIC: Experimental Details: Jumbuktu is the name Bill Buttler (multi-instrumental guru) and Paul Mitchell use when they team up to create spoken word/music fusions. As if Nothing is Happening. And it is is their first CD and contains many tracks that have appeared on Going Down Swinging CDs for the past five years. Pauls poignant words and dramatic delivery are wonderfully enhanced by Bills electronic music: atmospheric, rhythmic and sometimes downright scary. The CD received a great review in POAM, the Melbourne Poets Union newsletter: At last, a poetry CD that you can listen to as you would a music CD...Mitchell uses his formidable reading skills he knows when and how to hang a pause out there, so that the listener is thirsting for what comes next...Buttler's contribution to this album is immense...[He] employs music styles at times so familiar to us...they act as another image in the poem...The everyday world of these poems poses insurmountable problems, asks unanswerable questions. This is a CD for the times. Garth Madsen Paul Mitchell lived in several small country towns before completing secondary school in Geelong. He now lives in Yarraville in Melbournes inner west, with his wife, Simone, and two children. Pauls work has appeared in numerous Australian journals, magazines and newspapers. It has also been broadcast on Triple R radio in Melbourne, and Sydneys The Red Room. Pauls currently studying for a Masters of Creative Arts (Creative Writing) at the University of Melbourne.
