I listen to and enjoy many different styles of music from folk music to classical, jazz and rock roll. My writing reflects these influences. In my work with kids in workshops, concerts, and as an elementary school music teacher my first goal is to show the kids that music is a fun activity that everyone can be successful at. I want them to be so comfortable with their own abilities that they can truly feel the experience of personal musical expression. When this happens, music can be a powerful tool for creative learning, curriculum enhancement, building a shared group experience, and promotion of self esteem. Children's music is important, probably more now than it has ever been. I think the messages kids are getting from the mainstream media are often very unhealthy. I, and other musicians like me, are looking at music for children as more than just entertainment.
