"...Think of the most perfect pop music given an epic make over and you'll get an idea of the sound. Night Comes Down is outstanding at over 5 minutes it sweeps you away on a celestial soundscape all brass and beautiful key changes. If Belle And Sebastian had written this it would make single of the week/month everywhere Listen and fall in love" (Box Set Go) ...The band seem to defy genre with each song seemingly influenced by a different style...a throwback to joyous 60s pop complete with the required handclaps and male-female harmonies... (Another Form of Relief blog) Take The Pills blog said: ...indie pop full of sweet melodies combined with fuzzy and jangling guitars that reminds me of the mid 80s bands from the anorak city and especially The Go-Betweens...pure pop songs... ...Tracks like Times Table and the brilliant Night Comes Down seem to show a precise attitude for joyful folk-strummed guitars, clear voices in early R.E.M. style, aberrant instrumentation and deep playing organs making tracks float on a soft pop colored musical bubble. Not forgetting nice and clever lyrics included on the course... (Sleepwalking Mag) ...Im obsessed with the three minute rush of a classic pop song and The Hi-Life Companion have produced one that is essentially undeniable...Their harmonies can recall the Beach Boys at times, but they take it a bit further, latching onto an atonal groove and combining it with a catchy melody at the same time. They may have stumbled upon the perfect prescription to write their songs into your brain waves, permanently! (The Finest Kiss blog)
