Her intuitive vocal improvisations and crystal bowl playing are featured in the soon to be released documentary film, The Sound You Feel: Vibrations of Healing, and have received international acclaim for their sensitivity, depth and beauty. Classically trained, Ashana graduated with a degree in vocal studies from the Mannes College of Music in New York City, and for years performed as soloist and ensemble member in New Yorks early music scene. Moving from ancient to contemporary, she immersed herself in theater, jazz, pop and childrens music as performer, recording artist, songwriter and teacher. For the last decade, she has been involved in a deeply personal exploration of sound healing and vocal toning, during which period she discovered and began playing quartz crystal singing bowls, instruments that are often used in contemplative practices to support healing, balance and well-being. For me, singing is a life path, a spiritual journey that has led to the very core of my being, says Ashana. Music can transport us, lift us to the place where we gently let go and open completely to receive and remember the divine heart that lives within each one of us, that truly lives in all beings. I have seen, felt and been utterly transformed by the power of sound and music to heal; it is a gift to us from the Source of Love it is total, pure Grace.
