The two met in 1978 at a night club in Washington, D.C. while playing in a blues band, backing up a Detroit based singer named Catfish Hodge (catfishpond.com). After recording an album with him entitled "Eyewitness Blues" produced by "Freebo", bassist for Bonnie Raitt, they toured for a solid year, playing with many of the blues greats, such as John Lee Hooker, James Cotton, Professor Longhair, John Mayall, The Dixie Dregs, Edgar Winter, Lowell George and Bonnie Raitt. After departing the Catfish Hodge Band, David Diana formed a local band in the D.C. area and played around at various clubs until moving to New York City in late 1980. While in New York they hooked up with an independent management company, which shall remain nameless and worked on original music, recording demos with various studio musicians, including Laura Brannigan's band. They also did a video with a group they named "Lafayette", after living on Lafayette Street in Chinatown, lower Manhattan. The video was done in the pre MTV days and being that there was a shortage of videos on the market at the time, record companies not fully believing in them yet, David Diana managed on their own to have their video aired between movies on HBO (video jukebox) and CINEMAX (pop spots) for about a month or so. Boy, times have changed. They also recorded a 5 song EP at the famous Electric Lady Land Studios in Greenwich Village, entitled Lafayette. In November of '91 they left the "Big Apple" behind and headed down to the sunny Florida Keys, where Blue Byou was formed early the following year and the rest is Blue Byou history in paradise.
