Details: Leeza's music is generated using a laptop computer and no other electronic devices. It has its main roots in what was once called Intelligent Techno, and is clearly inspired by the good records published during the '90s by labels such as Warp, Rephlex, Skam, etc. With "Living in a Pixel", he has crafted an album of classic melodic electronic compositions which are very rarely tuneless. The disc opens with "Atrop", its shortest track (...and one of the most frantic too...), built on repetitive pads, obsessive drums and 303-flavoured basslines. With its intertwining melodies and pads backed by distorted drums, "Ermos" is notably one of the most complex and fascinating track on the album and is a perfect example of Leeza's music. The title track is a more relaxed mid-tempo number based on bouncing arpeggios, minimal percussive patterns and reverberd beats. "Phonetic Boot" is filled with sampled breakbeats, metallic hats and a twisted acid bassline. "Vacuum Pulse", "No Connection" and "Sbooph" are other fine examples of Leeza's trademark twinkling tones, delicate melodies and warm basslines that make his mid-pace electronica so worth. "Switkake" is a sweet lullaby played on a plastic glockenspiel and laid upon a smiling discrete bassline, a last pixel still shimmering as the monitor turns black...
