Lastonedone is an acoustically driven pop band with a California rock flare. California Soul. Defined with an acoustic guitar and an eclectic blend of sounds and vocal harmonies. Hailing from Orange County, California, they embrace the ideals of youthful freedom and a seize the moment attitude. Their live performances infect listeners with a feel-good and contagious optimism. They see themselves as songwriters who write with passion on topics of love, friendship, and the hope in living your dreams. Lastonedone began as Singer/ Songwriter Isaiah Olsen sought to take his music to the next level and fulfill a youthful dream that he and a few very talented friends from high school had once hoped for. In 2001, After making a four song Demo, Lastonedone had early successes; selling out venues in L.A., Orange County and San Diego. Praise from press and a rapidly growing fan base sparked the interest of management. Lastonedone was also entertaining talk with Epic Records. Sadly, the group fell short a member when bassist Josh Nichols decided to return to school on the east coast. In a city mostly known for its punk scene, the remaining trio had difficulty finding a replacement. Amidst the demise of the group and clear focus of destination, Isaiah found himself collaborating with many different writers across the country and musical genres. Finally beginning to realize his sound and attitudes toward songwriting, Isaiah wrote a myriad of tunes that caught the interest of some veteran ears. After a few writing excursions to Nashville, Tennessee a number and name of a songwriter/producer back in California was offered. Following up on the reference, Isaiah met Danny Wilde, singer/ songwriter/ musician and producer for The Rembrandts, who had a fresh perspective on where the songs should go.

For singer/songwriter/guitarist, Isaiah Olsen, the name of his musical alter ego, Lastonedone, once more seems to fit his situation like a well worn shirt. The band has a new line up and the showcasing of his talent in a well produced format is finally being realized. The long awaited Lastonedone EP is here and Lastonedone is looking to be noticed near and far from its home base out of the place in Southern California, called The O.C. Produced by Danny Wilde and Dorian Crozier (The Rembrandts); The new six-song early promotional CD serves as a preview for Lastonedones upcoming full-length album.
