Details: From its delicate yet electric flat-picked opening notes to the ringing chords and crashing cymbals of its climactic finish, Ben Cooley Halls Owning Up To A Life takes listeners through a kind of thematic indie-pop-rock-folk symphony. A chapter in one mans journey from powerlessness to self-possession, from muteness to voice, from depression to life, might not sound like something youd want to listen to once, let alone again and again. But, in Ben Cooley Halls hands, it is. Halls infectious melodies give his thoughtful and heartfelt lyrics musical vitality and staying power. The varied sonic topography helps, too, ranging from lush string and horn arrangements to bare bones voice and guitar. Guest appearances by Lyndon Cordero Lopez (trumpet), Paul Frederick (clarinet), Bob Terlisner (bagpipes), and Steven James Lawrence (piano) further enrich these solid songs. Owning Up To A Life reveals in Ben Cooley Hall a talented songwriter who can turn his interior discoveries into concise, catchy songs and deliver them with artistry and heart.
