Anti-Genre, thematic synth string electronic progressions. 16 MP3 Songs ELECTRONIC: Virtual Orchestra, ELECTRONIC: Ambient Details: Tell the people that you love how much they mean to you; Soon all will be waste. Soon Time will have her wish, Bringing us all home For a final kiss, and then: Sleep well, children. "No, it's not. For example, you know that something on the order of every seven years the average human replaces ninety eight percent of their molecules with new molecules? Thats like every seven years, you're ninety eight percent different than you were before, yet you notice no real change at all. I guess you kind of realize that you're growing older, and your relationships change, but you feel like you're the same person, for the most part." "Really? Ninety eight percent?" I asked, wondering if she was right. "Look it up!" she replied. "Anyway, that's not the point I'm making, it's just an idea, an example. The point I am trying to make to you is that you never notice a change, but a change has been made, gradually. And maybe that's what happens when you die, you just sort of make a smooth transition to the next level, a level that's probably only about one or two percent of the way things are as we know it." "Thats a good point, but I think you're reaching for something that isn't really there." "Maybe, but it makes sense to me." She crossed her arms on top of the covers. "I mean, you don't have to have god for that, do you?" Someday, when we are old and grey fools when we're waiting to die, what we've done, what we're thinking, we'll wonder: was living worth the lies? All of our heartaches, all of the scars worn, bandaged, hidden - we are the weary war-torn. For us: the darkness, forever. We are like the lifeless stars. The sun rises; we drift.
