Agent Provocateur by Nathalie Gray He has been trained to infiltrate the enemy and kill it from the inside, a breathing weapon, a super soldier with genetic enhancements that brand him a freak. He doesn't care. He needs no one. But when he meets another like him, a woman as beautiful as she's dangerous, a strange thing happens to him-he starts to hope. TO MY READER: I've always wanted to write a story set in my hometown of Montreal. Agent Provocateur is it. Against a backdrop of a 24th century dystopian society, this is the story of Troy and Mercury, both secret weapons in their own rights. As they slalom around obstacles, blow stuff up and generally destroy their way to their goal, they have to decide which is more dangerous-falling in enemy territory, or falling for each other. What have I done to my beautiful Montreal?! ABOUT THE AUTHOR: After a twelve-year career in the Canadian military (army), where I learned English and the many uses of parachute cord and gun tape, I decided to recycle my skills and become a writer. Of erotic romance. What can I say? I'm a late bloomer. To know more about my books, my real-life adventures or my opinions about nothing important, visit me at nathaliegray.com.
