ELECTRONIC: Ambient, CLASSICAL: New Age Details: RUBEN GARCIA I CAN FEEL THE HEAT CLOSING IN Ruben Garcia softly touches the black and white keys of his pianos like a river into an ocean of stillness. Drifting melodies, single notes falling like raindrops off a branch after a storm and far away echoes, courtesy of Jeff Pearce and Steve Caton, bring the listener into an ever deepening realm of dream and being. Named after a title by Harold Budd, "I Can Feel The Heat Closing In," is a masterpiece of quiet and reflective music for within. Following in the footsteps of Budd, Garcia has become a master at bringing one into the present moment. Deeply calming, Ruben's music offers a bridge of exploration one can follow in any direction. Equally pleasurable for an inner journey, it also heightens appreciation for the world around us, of which it sparingly borrows certain sounds: a touch of a storm, a lonely birdsong and a slow wave occasionally adorn a musical phrase. An artist of great sensibility, yet untamed, Garcia also gives us one wild and raunchy track, a refreshing practice he has maintained through all his albums. "The Men Are Fighting" evokes the edge one needs to have in order to preserve their softness.
