Speaking of the orchestral arrangements: "... For one thing, he leaves enough room for his own inspired melodic improvising and that of tenor saxophonist and clarinetist Chris Collins, who channels Stan Getz to fine effect. Monear's crafty arrangements are also braised by subtle harmonic turns and some nice orchestration touches -- like the solo violin line behind Barbara Ware's warm vocal at the end of "Always" that sounds as if Monear is having his Nelson Riddle moment. Monear himself croons "I Had the Craziest Dream" in a surprisingly silky baritone. The album ends with pared instrumental readings of "Street of Dreams," "Once in a While" and "Alone Together" that eschew the orchestral scrim for serene and uncluttered beauty.
