Like most Texans, he is proud of his heritage, and like many southerners he is proud to be country. Ramoth-Gilead was brought up listening to his father's 60's/70's selection of soul music, and his mother's favorite gospel records of the 80's. A lot of these early influences are prevalent in his own music and lyrics. At the moment, Ramoth-Gilead travels and performs independently as a solo artist in and around major cities of the United States.
