

The Parents We Mean To Be - Richard Weissbourd

Harvard psychologist Richard Weissbourd argues incisively that parents not peers, not television are the primary shapers of their children's moral lives. And yet, it is parents' lack of self-awareness and confused priorities that are dangerously undermining children's development. Through the author's own original field research, including hundreds of rich, revealing conversations with children, parents, teachers, and coaches, a surprising picture emerges. Parents' intense focus on their children's happiness is turning many children into self-involved, fragile conformists. The suddenly widespread desire of parents to be closer to their children a heartening trend in many ways often undercuts kids' morality. Our fixation with being great parents and our need for our children to reflect that greatness can actually make them feel ashamed for failing to measure up. Finally, parents' interactions with coaches and teachers and coaches and teachers' interactions with children are critical arenas for nurturing, or eroding, children's moral lives. Weissbourd's ultimately compassionate message based on compelling new research is that the intense, crisis-filled, and profoundly joyous process of raising a child can be a powerful force for our own moral development.
