Details: Dreaded Concept Album is the artistic magnum opus of The Inactivists... Written by and starring the Inactivists, Colorados foremost purveyors of angry lounge music, Jahoprah The Golden Guitar is a story of hope for those discouraged by todays music scene. The story takes place in the entirely fictitious, yet oddly familiar, world of Claxnor; a land where the thuggish theocracy has banished all forms of music. That is until one day, a young goatherd by the name of Jahoprah is given a golden guitar by a mysterious gorilla. Soon the entire government is after the idealistic Jahoprah. Things look grim, but dont worry -- everything works out in the end. The people of Claxnor learn a lesson and Jahoprah even falls in love. Having recorded their first two albums in just a matter of days (including Westwords 2005 Moover Shakers award winner, Disappointing Follow-Up), the Inactivists spent over a year at Ian Hlatkys Woodshed Studios recording this CD, and finished mastering at Colorado Sound Studios in late 2006. On Dreaded Concept Album the Inactivists play-up all the prog-rock pretensions of such albums as The Whos Tommy, Styx's Kilroy Was Here, and E.L.Ps Tarkus. Or perhaps, they used the supposedly ironic title as an excuse to indulge every over-blown idea they had. Aside from the Inactivists usual line-up of clarinet, theremin, and ukulele, the Dreaded Concept Album features mandolins, recorders, accordions, cellos, vibraphones, banjos, backwards vocals, and numerous guest performers. The album ranges from New Age noodlery to accordion-fueled death metal. From country-rap to a funk song that turns into a Slim Whitman style waltz. The songs range from over seven and a half minutes, to well under one minute. Everything is jammed into this album; there are songs in Esperanto, sign language, and gibberish, as well as possibly the most unnecessarily offensive couplet in the history of the English language: "Trying to train a St. Bernard to orally please us/ Awash in the menstrual blood of gay Nazi Jesus". inactivists.com myspace.com/theinactivists
